Guests get the best of both worlds, that's what.

Knowledgeable travelers agree that the inns of New England are among the best in the country. To say, therefore, that The Greenleaf Inn of Boothbay Harbor, Maine, is among the best in New England is to say a very great deal indeed. The Greenleaf elevates a long tradition to something like its height, offering what one particularly impressed reviewer has called "affordable luxury." Imagine a place that has all the services of a large resort but is nevertheless as snug as an elegant family retreat. Now imagine such a place in the U.S. Virgin Islands. The proprietors of Boothbay's remarkable Greenleaf Inn are in the process of opening a southern branch, the Villa Greenleaf, on St Croix, bringing the meticulousness of the New England innkeeping tradition – the attention to detail, the anticipation of guests' needs, the unfazed readiness to make any and all special arrangements – to one of the loveliest places on earth. Needless to say, the amenities are top-of-the-line: Jacuzzi, personal car, pool, private beach, charming rooms with terraces and wonderful views, tennis and golf nearby, easily arranged snorkeling and diving trips. But what really sets the Villa Greenleaf apart is what it brings to St Croix from the great New England innkeeping tradition – a level of polish, an unobtrusive perfection, a take-it-for-granted comfort that promises to mix wonderfully well with the take-it-for-granted warmth and sun of St Croix. In other words, if you're looking for the kind of place where you don't really have to ask for anything at all because the owners have already thought of it, you can now head south to St Croix, as well as north to Maine.

This is a vacation that can't be missed!
